Good competition promotes win-win scenario for life

Winning isn't everything, it's the only thing.

— Vince Lombardi

It's not whether you win or lose, but how you play the game.

— Mom

By Rev. Rick Funk

A few years ago, a friend of mine called me up and said, "Hey, we're short a few players for our soccer game. Would you mind playing for our team tonight?" Always wanting to play a game, I said, "Sure!" When I arrived, he said, "Just tell the ref you're Robert since he's not here." My friend was asking me to lie about my identity just so he would have an extra sub on the bench and increase his team's chance of winning. Why would he do that?

Obviously, I couldn't lie about who I was for a number of reasons, so I didn't play that night. But it reminded me that somehow, somewhere we've gotten the wrong idea about competition and winning. How is it that competition, and sports in particular, would bring out the worst (lying and cheating) as opposed to the best (character and excellence) in me? Unfortunately, I think I was trained to think of my opponent as someone to conquer rather than someone to care for. My competition was someone to destroy not develop. David Shields from the Notre Dame Mendelson Center for Character and Culture calls it de-competition, "whereby the opponent is not seen as an honorable opponent, but rather an obstacle, of little worth, to be overcome."

Our chapel team is in the middle of softball season, and soccer season is just around the corner. Many of us enjoy sports and good competition and sometimes we get fired up and really want to win. We might even trash talk our opponents sometimes in jest and sometimes not. Over a long period of time, this attitude creeps into other behaviors and we look at others as competition in a race rather than companions on a journey. The idea becomes, "Only one person can stand at the top of the winner's platform, and whatever it takes, that's going to be me." I would suggest to you that that is not a sustainable view of life.

Dr. Sharon Stoll, the Director for the Center for Ethics at the University of Idaho has done extensive research on the effect of sports on moral reasoning.

She just concluded a 15 year study and she discovered that "in our studies of over 60,000 individuals, the research is rather clear: the environment of athletics has not been supportive of teaching and modeling moral knowing, moral valuing, and moral action." Her findings revealed that athletes developed a poor view of people and a willingness to lie, cheat or steal in order to win. Dr. Stoll recommends that we must change our attitude about athletics and consider competition as means for mutual improvement rather than "winner takes all."

One of the benefits of living on this island is that it sharpens your character; you are less likely to get away with sloppy living. We realize that in all of our sports (and everything else we do) you will see the same people over and over again. If my attitude towards you is to destroy you or wipe you out, then my competition and community is degraded and devalued. I don't want to destroy you, I want you to be at your best and when we play, I hope that you help me improve as a player and a person. Then our community and our competition is enriched and enhanced. I think that's a game I can live with.

I didn't get to play soccer that night a few years ago, but I went home with a clean conscience and a clear conviction that competition isn't about winning, it's about character; character that cares as much about others as myself. So call me up, let's play a game and I hope I win and I hope you do, too. That's a win-win life.

Letters to the Editor

Manit Day organizers appreciate tech support

Through you I wanted to convey a note of supreme thanks for Craig McCarraher's assistance in pulling together a laptop-based presentation for the Manit Day evening program at the Richardson. It would have been easy for him to dismiss the effort as too sticky and problematic given several initial failures. Equally justifiable would have been for him to step back from the effort because of the extra time required for a task that was outside of any regular work duties. He was creative in coming up with fixes. He was generous with his time and energies in meeting with us several times after hours. The result was a technically satisfying breakthrough in community presentation that added considerably to the Manit Day celebration. Thank you, thank you.

Birthday party nets Christmas donation

Jim and I would like to thank everyone that helped celebrate his birthday. Because of your big hearts, all toys that you so thoughtfully gave will be donated to the children on the Outer Islands for Christmas. I'm sure that the children will love them.

The Mic Shop gives back to Micronesia for 40 years

By KW Hillis
Assistant Editor

Shark, dolphin and seahorse woodcarvings; woven baskets, jewelry and wall hangings, many shell-encrusted; wooden walking sticks sporting carved octopus on the handles, fans surrounded with chicken feathers; and books about Micronesia are just some of the crafts that fill The Micronesian Handicraft Shop across from Café Pacific. But The Mic Shop, as it is better known, does more than provide an outlet for Micronesian handicrafts, it also adds a significant amount of money each year to the Micronesian economies, holding true to founder Josephine White's vision when she opened the shop's doors in September 1962.

"[The shop] is multipurpose," said Dianne Tarnstrom, Yokwe Yuk Women's Club Mic Shop co-chairperson. Besides keeping handicraft alive in the South Pacific by buying direct from craftspeople throughout the islands; it helps local people get interested in Micronesia, its people and cultures; and gives a place for people on Kwajalein to volunteer for a really good cause which is raising money for education.

Yesterday, The Mic Shop celebrated 40 years under the guidance of the YYWC.

White, the wife of the then-trust territory district representative for Kwajalein who was transferred to Yap, turned over the small, unconditioned shop at the airport terminal to the YYWC a year after she founded it. At that time, the YYWC decided to direct all profits from the shop to further education in Micronesia. The YYWC Educational Assistance Committee now decides who receives the grants.

"This last year, between $45,000 and $50,000 in grants from The Mic Shop and the Bargain Bazaar [another YYWC project] went to educational grants," Tarnstrom said.

Last year, the EAC was lucky enough that we were able to fund almost every request, said Cris Lindborg, YYWC EAC member

Grants are given to graduating seniors, principals, teachers, to schools for projects and school supplies, but the grants have to be requested and certain criteria met, Tarnstrom said.

"Not only does money go into educational needs, but it is also encouragement for all these people to do these handicrafts," Lindborg said. "The money goes straight back to people who make them. A lot of these women in the outer islands don't have a source of cash — there are no jobs."

Over the years the quality of the handicrafts has remained high, Tarnstrom said. She has been a member of the YYWC and involved with the Mic Shop since arriving in 1980 for the first of three separate tours.

"There might be more diversity in the handicrafts, but it has always been good [quality] in all the years I have been here," she said. "Chuuk has started sending us storyboards ... We get new legends with those storyboards."

The crafts are marked up about 40 percent, but with shipping and breakage, the shop makes about 20 percent for EAC. The original cost is sent directly back to the crafts people, she said.

"People sometimes complain about the prices of the handicrafts, but the hours that it actually takes the crafts people to make it is really significant," she said. "A basket takes 20 or 30 hours to make" and that doesn't include the hours to make the material used in the basket.

"When they put the little holes in the shells to put them on the edge of a basket, they do that by hand," Tarnstrom said. "So we are really trying to be fair to the people who are buying and also the craft people."

The shop, which was located in the airport terminal since 1962, except for a brief move to a trailer in March 1999 while air conditioning was installed in the terminal, moved to building 873, across from Café Pacific in November 2001. After 9-11, heightened security at the airport restricted access to the shop.

Sales have gone down over the years, because of a decrease in population, but the new location helps.

"The new location is much better," she said. "We have much more space. It is closer to town so people can just swing by and check if we're open because the hours are hard to remember."

The volunteers put in 60 to 80 man hours or "women hours" each week, Tarnstrom said. Those hours include cleaning, restocking and the six YYWC volunteer buyers' hours.

Helen Smith handles all the crafts from the Marshalls, she said. The crafts come from the outer islands of both Kwajalein and Majuro. Relatives bring them into Ebeye or Majuro.

The shells, which also come from the Marshalls, are handled by Kathy Campbell. Tina Szczepanski handles the crafts from Pohnpei, Jane DeJoie buys from Chuuk and Lindborg takes care of Palau and Kosrae. Finally, books, maps and any kind of publications are taken care of by Debbie Proudfoot.

During the transition early in the year, the shop lost three buyers, but an influx of new YYWC members has helped the shop.

"Volunteering at the Mic Shop is a good thing for newcomers or anyone that is interested," she said. "It introduces you to the Marshalls ... There is something about working with handicrafts that spurs them in to going a bit further and finding out about the islands or the people."

For those who are not interested in joining the YYWC, they should come by to see the handicrafts available in the islands, she added.

For the month of October, the shop will be open for additional hours (see box). On Monday, in honor of the shop's 40th birthday, the hours are 11 a.m. – 2 p.m. and all handicrafts, other than shells, will be 10 percent off.

A Marshallese kemem celebrates the first year of life

Editor's Note: This is part one of a four-part series on the major events in the life of Marshallese. We start with the first birthday, or kemem, and will continue next week with graduation, followed by marriage and death in the coming weeks.

By Jan Waddell
Reporter

The first birthday, or kemem, is one of the four most important days in the Marshallese culture, celebrated among other major life events such as graduation, or kadiwojlok; wedding, or mare; and wake or funeral, or ilomej.

"Anything to do with family is big in the Marshall Islands," said Noda Lojkar, USAKA ombudsman and acting mayor of Ebeye. "Family ways are really strong."

Family, extended family and friends celebrate the kemem together.

"Religion is deeply rooted in all Marshallese customs," said Romeo Alfred, KRS training specialist. "It [kemem] is kind of like a traditional western birthday."

Most Marshallese customs and traditions were passed down by word of mouth, until western culture and religion was introduced into the Marshallese culture.

The kemem starts with prayer and blessing by a minister or priest, depending what religion the family is. Each stage of the kemem celebration is always marked with prayer and blessings, Alfred said.

According to Thompson Tarwoj, the leiroj or queen is invited to kemem and other special events in the Marshallese culture.

The mother and the father go to the leiroj's home and invite her to attend the kemem, he added. She will either come to the celebration or send someone in her place.

At the start of the kemem all the family members and extended family members gather at the child's family home to prepare the food.

The night before kemem the family prepares for the groups of friends and extended family to visit.

The start of the visiting is a surprise, said Claire Henry. They are there to start the kemem spirit and to show love and that the family is held in high regard.

"They get you in the mood for the celebration," Henry said.

One by one the groups line up outside the home and wait their turn to visit. During the visiting there is singing and dancing. The visitors come in one group at a time while the other groups wait their turn. The different groups could be the baseball team, co-workers or church choir, to name a few. They come dancing and singing and the family has small snacks for the visitors.

This could go on until dawn, Henry said.

After the birthday-eve celebration, the next day, everyone gets together at the home of the child. Prayers start the celebration and there is always food, Alfred said. There is more entertainment and a meal.

The men prepare the wōn, or pit for cooking, Tarwoj said. The men cook all the meat and the women prepare the rice, fruit and other non-meat dishes served, he added.

One of the traditional dishes served at Tarwoj's daughter's kemem, was pereu, a dish made with coconut. Other traditional foods were fish, chicken and other assorted dishes prepared with coconut.

The family cooked all morning and into the evening, Tarwoj said.

After the food is prepared then everyone dresses up for the celebration.

Kemem starts after the leiroj and the priest or pastor have arrived, and given their blessing.

We always wait until the leiroj arrives before we eat, Tarwoj added.

The kemem is never started until the lieroj and the priest arrives, Henry said. Even if the lieroj is late, everyone waits until the lieroj arrives.

At the kemem of Tarwoj's first born, the leiroj and family elders sat at tables while the rest of the family and friends sat on the floors around them.

After everyone finished eating there was more entertainment with dancing and singing, to celebrate his daughter's birthday.

Then the leiroj formed a line, with all other guests behind her, and one by one each guest passes by the child, held by her mother and father, and offered a blessing, gift or a dollar bill, Tarwoj said.

According to Alfred, the traditional gift is a dollar bill. This is to honor the child. They are wishing the baby happy birthday, Alfred said. The visiting and singing can go until early morning, he added.

The dollar is to help the family with the cost of the kemem, Henry said. Guests also bring gifts and cakes to the kemem.

Family and extended family bring traditional or regional foods from the outer islands such as breadfruit, preserved breadfruit, fish, sashimi and they also bring the pig, he added. There is also a birthday cake, a development that came from the Western culture.

It is a time of thanksgiving, Alfred said. The child survived the first year of life, he added.

According to Henry the baby also receives its first haircut after the kemem. This is to signify the shedding of the past year and the celebration of surviving the first year of life, she added.

Another custom is the taking of the family things by the visitors.

Everything is fair game at the kemem, Henry said. Guests feel it is an honor to have something from the family.

It is a big undertaking for the family. It is not uncommon to bring in 1,000 people, Alfred said. If you are part of the iroij, or chief's family though, there could be thousands and thousands of people who attend the kemem celebration.

Lojkar said the cost of his son's kemem was around $10,000.

One thing to remember when attending any Marshallese event is proper clothing, Alfred said. The ladies wear dresses which cover them, not short skirts. The men wear long pants.

If you are invited, don't forget to take the dollar bill, he added. But just your presence is what is really appreciated.

Tarwoj added, proper dress is important to show respect not only to the family, but also to the leiroj. Women should always wear a long dress, he added.

The parents of the child also present the leiroj, iroij or representative, whoever attends the kemem, with a special gift prepared just for them, Lojkar said. It could be food, cloth for shirts of dress or some special item just for the leiroj or iroij. It is a way for the family to say thank you and show their appreciation.

When the royal family is having a kemem or any event, then the whole village is involved, Lojkar said. Everybody comes, he added.

After the first-birthday celebration, all other birthdays are just another day, Alfred said. It is no big deal, except for the iroij. Each iroij birthday is a celebration. The people who work for them usually bring them gifts. They also bring food, which is a customary Marshallese practice.

Handicrafts of Micronesia

Micronesian carving tradition lives in hand-crafted works

Reprinted from Creative Hands by Leslie Anne Killeen

Carving is a traditional art of Micronesia, which has been adapted into handicrafts. It consists of carvings or paintings on wood and on public buildings.

Palau continues to produce a large quantity of carvings. Wooden utensils, bowls, and other containers are still carved for functional purposes. An old form of decoration found in Palau is wood inlaid with mother-of-pearl.

Today, many types of wood carvings are sold as handicrafts. Items from Palau include storyboards, monkey-men, tikis, and statuary. Love sticks and war clubs come from Chuuk. From Ponape come wooden fish and other sea life. The sharks from Ponape are extremely popular.

Navigational charts known as stick charts are made only in the Marshalls.

Models of outrigger canoes and rafts are made throughout Micronesia, each depicting the unique style of its area.

Woods used for carving vary as to availability. Two common woods are breadfruit, a very soft wood, and mangrove, a hard wood.

Storyboards

One of the most famous items of handicraft from Micronesia is the Palauan storyboard. Its origin was a traditional art form. The rafters of the bais (men's community houses) were carved and colored. The original colors used were black, brown, and white.

The carvings so impressed the Germans when they ruled Palau that they cut whole rafters from the bais and shipped them back to Germany for their homes and museums.

When the Japanese arrived, the artist Hijikata thought it rather senseless to hack apart the bais. He started training young Palauans to carve and paint storyboards on small pieces of wood.

Each carver has his own style of carving. A border design is sometimes established as a trade mark. The enamel paints used by contemporary carvers produce boards much brighter and more colorful than the older boards. Natural wood finish is common now due to commercial influences.

A whole story from folklore or just a motif may be depicted on a board.

Lovesticks

Lovesticks come from Chuuk. They are wooden and carved with geometric designs. They range from 1/4- to 1/2-inch wide and from one to four feet long. Traditionally, the lovestick was used by a man seeking a sweetheart. The man would thrust the stick through the thatch wall of the girl's hut. The girl could identify her caller by feeling the pattern. If she desired his company, she would pull the stick into the house. Otherwise, she would push it out.

Canoes

Canoes represent a way of life for the Micronesians. The small amount of land surrounded by water necessitated water navigation. Each area has its distinct type of boats. Though motor boats have replaced many of the canoes, canoes do still exist. Scaled-down replicas are also being made and sold as handicrafts.

The function of a canoe dictates its design. A canoe built for traveling and fishing outside the lagoon is designed to go much faster than one being used for transporting cargo. Cargo canoes are rather long and have side platforms at the middle.

The canoes most commonly received as handicraft from Ponape are made in the Kapingamarangi village. This is a settlement of people from the atoll of Kapingamarangi. The model canoes are lashed with handmade coconut rope. The sails are woven from pandanus. Two paddles, a bailer, sail, and rigging are included. The size is generally between one and three feet.

Manit Day raises awareness, removes barriers

By KW Hillis
Assistant Editor

Early on Monday, before American and Marshallese children using sharpened sticks, pried open coconuts and then drank their sweet reward; and before demonstrations of Marshallese weaving, flower decorations, rope making, fishing equipment and storytelling entranced Kwajalein residents; a group of Ebeye women sat on the ground and wove row after row of thatch out of palm fronds.

They sat under a red and white canvas tent to protect them from the incessant rain as they worked on the rows of thatch that would be used to refurbish the bare frames of two huts in front of the Marshallese Cultural Center during the annual Manit Day celebration.

"Manit is the word for culture," and the day, which is a Republic of the Marshall Islands national holiday, celebrates both new and old Marshallese culture, said Cris Lindborg, Marshallese Cultural Center director.

The center was filled throughout the day with people looking at the displays of handicrafts, tools, photographs and historical information. The full afternoon and evening of activities demonstrated the many facets of Marshallese life and included 80 of Jochaim deBrum's extensive collection of photographs, presented by Sue Rosoff, which depict the Marshallese culture in the late 1800 and early 1900.

The day was made possible by the Ebeye traditional leadership, Iroij Michael Kabua, Leroij Seagull Kabua James; 80 to 100 Marshallese and 50 or 60 people from the Kwajalein community; and many departments on island, Lindborg said.

Taking advantage of the cultural information on Manit Day is important in breaking down communication barriers, said Col. Jerry Brown, USAKA commander, to the audience before the beginning of the evening program of dance, music and slide presentation.

"One of the biggest contributors to the problems we have in the world today is our inability to communicate with each other," he said. "And the reason we have trouble most often is because cultural barriers get in the way of our understanding each other. That is why forums like we have here today are so important.

"Understanding the cultures of the communities we interact with helps us learn to communicate with each other," Brown said. "And if we can just break down those cultural barriers we can significantly improve the world around us."

The community did take advantage of the day, as Marshallese speakers presented a steady stream of crafts, arts and skills with the help of master of ceremonies and Marshallese Cultural Society President Eric Lindborg and translator Helbert Alfred, cultural society vice-president.

One speaker, Alter Langrine, explained the life-cycle of the coconut, told the history of the islands and demonstrated skills developed over centuries which allowed the Marshallese to live on tiny islands spread across the Pacific.

The audience learned that by using few local resources, mostly plant materials such as coconut husks, the islanders were able to make clothes, fish, eat and raise their families.

No barriers were evident as Brownie Kelsey Godfrey and the rest of her Brownie Troop tried to imitate Taiji Kilma's demonstration of how to open a coconut with a few swift movements.

Seven-year-old Jacob Martin saw the Brownie Troop opening coconuts and opened one himself, showing up triumphantly with half a coconut.

Christine Woodburn, 11, diligently wove some of the thatch. Periodically, Mirose Adde or Rosebeth Antorean, with smiles on their faces, silently moved a few of her woven strips. Woodburn immediately caught the new pattern and fixed the rest.

"I just kind of learned how," Woodburn said, making her teachers smile again.

Residents watched under another tent as palm fronds were quickly turned into baskets, hats and pinwheels for the children.

On ladders, Kabole Isaac, Elten Jesse, Henry Jack and many others throughout the hot afternoon raised the pieces of thatch and deftly attached them to the hut's frame.

The story of Jabro and how the canoe got it's sail, told by Ato Langkio, drew many listeners.

"It was wonderful. I loved the story-telling," said Karen Robas who also tried her hand at making thatch.

But the Marshallese culture is changing with the new "gadgets coming in," Alfred said later.

Fishing with modern hooks and nets instead of fishing with the old equipment made out of coconut husk ropes and plaited fronds makes a difference in how the local resources are used, he said.

"What I like most about the old ways, is that the idea of conserving was always with us," he said. "They never really depleted what they had. They

"When you are fishing with a fishing net, by the time you get all the fish out, they are all dead, you cannot let them go," he said. "But you've got the refrigeration system that can keep them so you can eat them over time. So you have pluses and minuses."

Watching the children and young adults, both Marshallese and American, crowd around the rope making and fishing equipment demonstrations, he said that this was good for the Marshallese young people and that they did help with special events like Manit Day.

"More and more I see the culture fading away as the Western culture is moving in, and I guess that is the way it is with most places that are developing," he said.

But keeping the past is important, Brown said.

Said Brown, "Seeing what you've done here today not only helps us understand Marshallese culture, it makes us want to do everything we can to help protect and preserve it."

Willis entertains 'Screaming Eagles'

By Pfc. Thomas Day, USA

Special to American Forces Press Service

MOSUL, Iraq, Sept. 26, 2003 — Silver screen star Bruce Willis and his blues band visited the soldiers of the 101st Airborne Division.

The 101st stop was just one in a number of goodwill visits on the "Bruce Willis and the Accelerators Touch of Home Tour" this week.

"I didn't see enough people coming out here and supporting the troops," said Willis, who was born on a military base in Germany in 1955. Willis's visit was the 101st's first goodwill visit from a Hollywood celebrity.

"Back home, the news is manipulated ... by people who would like the American people to believe the war is unpopular. It's not unpopular, especially with the Iraqi indigenous people (who) are being helped," Willis said. "This is the war on terrorism; it's worth fighting for."

The star of "Hart's War" and "Tears of the Sun" -- both films that deal with the military -- tirelessly lobbied to visit the troops for several weeks before getting the chance to see the real-life men and women in uniform. Willis clearly enjoyed himself playing in front of the audience of homesick soldiers.

"I wanted to sign up and fight with you guys, but they told me I was too old," he quipped. Willis also used some colorful language when describing what he would do if he had "four minutes with Saddam" and offered $1 million to any soldier who delivered Saddam's head to his doorstep.

Willis ate a late lunch with Command Sgt. Maj. Marvin Hill, the top

Hollywood action hero Bruce Willis performs with his group the Accelerators for the 101st Airborne Division, stationed in Iraq, 101st Airborne Division enlisted soldier, before flying around the division's area of operation in a CH-47 Chinook helicopter to meet the "Screaming Eagles." The busy day ended for Willis and his band after a one-hour concert in front of several hundred 3rd Brigade soldiers in Tal Afar, a town west of Mosul.

Brigade commander Col. Michael Linnington introduced Willis before his band's set, and afterward presented him with a 101st Airborne Division flag.

Willis left after his performance with a simple message for the 101st soldiers: "Stay safe and God bless you all."

IG agents break billion dinar counterfeit ring

From Department of Defense

Agents from the Defense Criminal Investigative Service (DCIS) and the 812th Military Police Company assisted by Iraqi police and the Ministry of Finance have broken a counterfeit printing operation in Baghdad and seized counterfeit currency worth 100 billion dinars.

DCIS agents and Military Police raided two locations, seized printing presses and arrested Amar Fadil Ramadan Al-Kayse, an Iraqi national who was subsequently released to Iraqi Ministry of Interior officials for prosecutorial action by the Iraqi Ministry of Justice and Courts.

The investigation leading to the arrest of Al-Kayse revealed that Al-Kayse was printing and attempting to pass counterfeit 250 Iraqi dinar notes to the Central Bank of Iraq (CBI), which is funded and operated by the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA). Al-Kayse owned and operated the Sarmad Company for Printing, a local Baghdad printing shop and worked as editor of Nuktat Dhaw, or "Spot Light," a newspaper in Baghdad.

A new Iraqi currency will be introduced on Oct. 15. The 'new Iraqi dinar' will replace existing currency, which is printed with images of Saddam. Unlike the old, low-quality paper money in use in Iraq, the new currency will be very difficult to counterfeit. It incorporates a number of modern security features specifically designed to foil fraudsters.

Deputy Inspector General Rear Admiral Larry Poe was detailed as the first Inspector General for Ambassador Bremer in Baghdad.
